Hand Wash and Body Cream Hand Wash: Hand Wash with Natural Cream, $12.95, www.dhccare.com 	The hand cream is a non-nonsense, heavy-duty moisturizer that actually kept my scaly skin feeling soft and smooth all day. The foamy tangerine scent is almost sweet enough to make me want to lick it out my trusty cocoa butter, but I can't see.	Dove is nice, and Job is intended to take hands only—and it does the job. This “age-defying” emollient made my man-hands baby soft, and they smelled like Creamsicle Pops to boot!	Call me Lady Marmalade ‘cause this stuff had me smelling brunch (and, er, umphous). It kept my knuckles and elbows well moisturized for a considerable length of time, but I couldn't shake that greasy residue feeling.
Face Wash Foaming Cleanser: Facial Cleanser, $12, www.dhccare.com 	I had my doubts about this face wash's ability to wipe away my Friday night makeup, but it proved me wrong. Plus, the green tea/lemon aroma brought my body back to nature after an evening of unnatural abuse.	I had some reservations about slathering this jelly cleanser on my face. The “creamy lather” it promised was more like a thin film layer, and it left my skin both softer and greasier.	You'd think that something that looks like soapy Vaseline and smells like jelly wood should go nowhere near your face. But actually, this stuff had my cheeks feeling super soft and smooth, and it didn't dry my poor winter pores.
Body Wash Mild Body Shampoo: $9, www.dhccare.com 	This body wash is as gentle and effective as Dove, but it boasts a pretty pink and white bottle that made me want to take it into a hot jacuzzi bath with some beer and chocolate.	Practical gals will love that DHC doubles as hand soap. With instructions in both English and Japanese, the cute bottle suggests that you're well traveled, and the soapy, rosy scent stayed with me well into the next day!	I expected to see rose petals floating around in my shower as I fluffed my loofah with these aromatic foamy suds. After using it, however, my skin felt a little parched.
